Snap and the Snow Dragon

Tracks in the Snow

Snap looked down at the snow. There were tracks in the snow. Big tracks. Strange tracks.

"Pip!" called Snap. "Come and look at this snow!"

Pip ran over, his long scarf dragging in the snow. "Wow," said Pip. "What made those?"

They followed the tracks. By the path, a snail sat on a rock. The snail had a round, shiny shell.

"Snail," said Snap, "did you see what made these tracks?"

The snail nodded. "I did," said the snail. "It went up the hill. I watched the whole thing, I did."

"Up the hill?" said Pip.

"Up the hill," said the snail.

Snap grinned. "Then up the hill we go!"

The Snake on the Path

Snap and Pip climbed higher up the hill.

A snake lay on a big flat rock by the path. The snake was long and green and very still.

"Snake," said Snap, "did you see what made those tracks?"

The snake lifted its head. "I did," said the snake. "Something big went up to the top. Something very big."

"How big?" said Pip.

"Big," said the snake. "Very, very big."

Pip gulped. Snap grinned.

"Come on, Pip," said Snap. "Let's go and see!"

The snake curled back up on its warm rock, and Snap and Pip went on up the hill.

Up the Hill They Go

"We must sneak," said Snap. "Nice and slow. We do not want to scare it."

Pip nodded. "We sneak," he said. "Slow and soft."

They began to sneak up the last part of the hill. Step. Step. Step.

Then Pip's long scarf got under his feet.

Down went Pip. Down went Snap. They bumped and rolled and tumbled all the way to the top.

Snap sat up. Pip sat up. They looked at each other.

"So much for sneak," said Pip.

Snap laughed. "We sneak again," he said. "But this time — no scarf."

The Snow Dragon

Snap and Pip got to the top of the hill.

There stood Mila, right in the snow. She had a big grin on her face.

"Look!" said Mila. She pointed at the snow.

Snap looked. In the snow was a huge dragon. A snow dragon! It had wings and a long tail and big round eyes, all made of snow.

"I made it for you, Snap," said Mila. "Do you like it?"

Snap loved it so much his tummy let out a long, loud rumble.

Pip laughed. Mila laughed. Snap laughed too.

Then all three of them ran and played and rolled in the snow until the snow was all around them and the sky grew pink and soft.
